

Call for Papers LSGL Academic Conference

Teaching Law amidst the crisis of the rules-based order(s)

24 February 2027

Universidad Torcuato Di Tella
Argentina

What should we teach, and how, when the order we teach about is itself in question?

The Law Schools Global League (LSGL) is delighted to announce its forthcoming Academic Conference, to be hosted by Universidad Torcuato Di Tella in Argentina and held in conjunction with the LSGL Dean's Meeting. We are happy to announce the call for papers and invite faculty members, researchers, and Ph.D. students to submit their research papers and participate in discussions on the conference theme: “Teaching Law amidst the crisis of the rules-based order(s)”.

Across jurisdictions and fields, the assumptions that once underwrote legal order are under severe strain. Conflict is on the rise, international institutions are contested, often blocked, judicial independence is eroding, and “the rules-based order” is invoked as readily to legitimate power as to constrain it – if there was ever one order rather than many. What does it mean to teach law under these conditions? We invite scholars from every field – private and public, domestic and international – to reflect on legal pedagogy amidst this deep crisis. How do we prepare students for systems whose foundations we can no longer take for granted, from constitutional design to international governance to the private-law architecture of markets?

Law Schools Global League

LSGL brings together law schools that share a commitment to the globalization of law and to integrating global law in their teaching and research. The purpose of the League is to promote legal education and scholarly research in relation to the globalization of law by, among other things, fostering academic debate on the impact of globalization on law and setting a research agenda for this. The League's agenda is broad and inclusive, covering all fields of law where globalization and interdependence are an issue.

Universidad Torcuato Di Tella

UTDT is a nonprofit institution founded in Buenos Aires in 1991 by the Torcuato Di Tella Institute and Foundation, with a mission to train new generations of business, academic, social, and political leaders. Today it offers 13 undergraduate degrees and more than 30 graduate programs, organized across 11 academic units, with a faculty of more than 170 regular professors and over 2,000 specialized instructors, alongside an active visiting professor program bringing scholars from top universities across the United States, Europe, and Latin America.

UTDT Law School

Founded in 1996, Di Tella's Law School has established itself as a leading center for professional legal education and cutting-edge legal research in Argentina and the region. Its mission is to contribute to Argentina, and Latin America's development through frontier research in strategic areas and the training of highly skilled legal professionals who lead and innovate across the different roles of the legal profession.

Its faculty brings together leaders of the legal profession in the country with researchers dedicated to the major legal challenges of our time, integrated into international networks and research projects alongside colleagues from around the world. Its teaching methodology—grounded in in-depth, horizontal discussion of relevant and current issues—aims to develop students' analytical and argumentative skills, as well as their creativity, leadership, and teamwork abilities.

The School offers an undergraduate law degree (Abogacía) along with the following graduate programs: a Master's in Law and Economics, a Master's in Tax Law, a Master's/Specialization in Criminal Law, and a Doctorate in Law. Its External Academic Evaluation Committee is made up of internationally renowned scholars from leading universities abroad.
